CATHOLICITY AND CONFSSIONALISM: Responding to George Beasley-Murray on unity and distinctiveness

John E. Colwell, Tutor, Spurgeon's College

George Beasley-Murray was committed to ecumenism, and saw clear witness to Baptist distinctives as necessary for this. His plea for a contemporary Baptist confession is re-echoed, with a critique of the Union's Declaration of Principle which Colwell finds somewhat lacking in important respects.

CELEBRATING DIVERSITY: Towards an inclusive church

Andy Goodliff, Bunyan Baptist Church, Stevenage

Beginning with Five Core Values, Goodliff offers a challenging consideration of inclusion in Baptist churches. This paper was presented to the Fourth Baptist Theological Consultation: Baptists Doing Theology in Context, Luther King House, Manchester, August 2006

A MISSIONARY FAMILY IN CHINA

Michael Ball, Retired Baptist minister

Records of his wife's extended family of BMS missionaries in China show something of the demands of such service on family life. Here Ball looks at James and Minnie Watson. Two further sections, available on the Baptist Historical Society's website, look at Fred and May Price, and Brynmor and Margaret Price.

A LETTER OF JOHN PENDARVES FROM 1656

Larry J. Kreitzer, Tutor, Regent's Park College, Oxford

This letter, here published in full for the first time, sheds light on Pendarves' Fifth Monarchism and on his family.

C.H. SPURGEON AND BAPTISM Peter J. Morden

Part 1: The Question of Baptismal Sacramentalism

Peter J. Morden is tutor in church history and spirituality at Spurgeon's College, London.

This two-part study analyses the baptismal theology and practice of C.H. Spurgeon. This first article establishes that Spurgeon's approach to Baptism was thoroughly 'non-sacramental' and seeks to show why. A second article will bring out the leading features of Spurgeon's baptismal theology.

VISIONARY WOMEN AMONG EARLY BAPTISTS

Curtis W. Freeman, Research Professor of Theology and Baptist Studies and Director of the Baptist House of Studies, Duke University Divinity School, examines the role of prophetic women in early Baptist life. Particular attention is given to writing prophetesses among the early Baptists and other dissenting groups more broadly. Freeman is editing a collection of the texts of these prophetic women, Strange and Wonderful Visions: Baptist Prophetesses in Seventeenth Century England, which will be published by Baylor University Press.

HENRY JACOB (1563-1624): Pastoral theology and congregational ecclesiology

Jason G. Duesing, Chief of Staff, Office of the President and Assistant Professor of Historical Theology, Southwestern Baptist Theological Seminary, Fort Worth, Texas

Known for his formation of seventeenth-century congregation-alism, this article argues that within Henry Jacob's articulation of church government, the office of the pastor functions as a keystone of the congregation in the New Testament church. This survey is the product of both synthesis and analysis of the works of Henry Jacob. For the former, a simplified and systematic formulation of Jacob's pastoral theology is seen in seven broad areas. For the latter, an effort is made to reflect on each area's contribution to the thesis of the pastor as congregational keystone.

THE POLITICS OF ESCHATOLOGY: Baptists in Interregnum Scotland

R. Scott Spurlock is Research Fellow, 'Insular Christianity c.1530-1750', Trinity College Dublin. He obtained an MSc and PhD in Ecclesiastical History at the University of Edinburgh, and became a postdoctoral fellow at the Institute for Advanced Studies in the Humanities. He is involved in the Wode Psalter Project, which includes the University of Edinburgh, the British Library, Trinity College Dublin and Georgetown University as partner institutions.

English Baptists viewed Scotland as a prime mission field from the early 1650s. Prominent Baptists such as Colonel Robert Lilburne, Commander-in-Chief of Cromwell's forces in Scotland, did all they could to promote their cause. English Baptist congregations were formed, which included some Scottish converts. However, an indigenous Baptist infrastructure was never established. The churches did not survive the removal of English leadership following allegations of Baptist plots against Cromwell.

MISGUIDED OR MISUNDERSTOOD? The case of Charles Spurgeon Medhurst (1860-1927), Baptist missionary to China

Judith C. Powles is the Librarian of Spurgeon's College, London

This article examines the life and work of Charles Spurgeon Medhurst, elder son of Thomas William Medhurst.¹ The younger Medhurst was a BMS missionary in China but became heavily involved with the Theosophical Society.² This caused a major crisis in 1904. Following his rift with Baptist colleagues he turned to the Liberal Catholic Church, where his theosophical principles and Christian faith could co-exist, and was ordained as a priest.

C.H. SPURGEON AND BAPTISM: The Importance of Baptism

Peter J. Morden, tutor in church history and spirituality at Spurgeon's College, London

BAPTISTS AND THE BIBLE

Stephen R. Holmes, Senior Lecturer in Theology at St Mary's College, University of St Andrews

This paper argues that the Declarations of Principle of the Baptist Unions of Scotland and Great Britain both claim a distinctive account of how Scripture should be read. This account seems uniquely British, but can be traced back to the beginnings of the Baptist movement. It is marked by an understanding of Scripture as a mediation of Christ's personal authority, appropriated pneumatologically through the gathered church.
